CAT CLAIMS: SEVERE, BUT PREVENTABLE

ABBY GREER February 8, 2023

While rare, CAT claims can and do happen. In recent years, the frequency and the cost of these type of injuries have skyrocketed, due in large part to the rise of medical treatment. So how do you avoid a catastrophe? Let's take a look...

As with most claims, catastrophic injuries are preventable. A recent review by Safety National published in Carrier Chronicles revealed the leading causes of CAT claims based on their reported claims:

Slips, Trips, and Falls (27%)

Remember #SafetyBlitz2021, when the ATA Comp Fund Risk Management team observed and rewarded drivers and employees caught "doing it right" when it came to preventing Slips, Trips, and Falls? Not only do these types of injuries account for 50% of all work injuries, they also account for more than a quarter of catastrophic injuries! And they are completely preventable. Learn more HERE.

Motor Vehicle Accidents (MVA) 19%

During this past year's #SafetyBlitz2022, we dedicated an entire month to the leading causes of MVAs, because these are also preventable. Distracted Driving, Speeding, Fatigue, Tailgating, and Weather all cause MVAs; and, being aware of - or prepared for - the dangers can prevent most accidents. Learn more HERE.

Struck by Machinery/Objects (14%) and Caught In, Under, Between (6%)

This includes a variety of events, including being struck by machinery (such as fork lifts) or falling objects. Situational awareness is a key factor in preventing most claims, especially in areas where one could be injured as a result of others' actions. Some of the worst accidents reported involve drivers being injured during the loading and unloading phase of a job. Check out our Flatbed & Lift Truck Safety Information HERE.

Burns (5%)

Rounding out the top five causes of CAT claims are burns, which can occur across multiple industries. Practice situational awareness to identify potential flammable hazards and how to safely contain them. NEW YEAR, EVEN BETTER YOU

ABBY GREER February 8, 2023

Did you know, almost 40% of US adults set New Year's resolutions... with more than 55% of them failing to keep them? Did you also know that the top three New Year's resolutions are: Exercise More (52%), Eat Healthier (50%), and Lose Weight (40%).

But what if we told you that if you made the commitment to do one (or all) of those things without labeling it as a "Resolution", you would be more motivated to keep it? Healthy lifestyle habits shouldn't be a goal for you to maybe maintain for a little while - it should be a change in mentality that you obtain and keep.

The trucking industry boasts over 7 million truck drivers. But, due to the nature of the job (sitting for long periods of time) and a seemingly lack of nutritional food options while on the road, our nation's truck drivers are statistically one of the unhealthiest populations, with over 50% of drivers being considered obese. In comparison, the national average of the general population who are obese is just under 27%. So what are some changes drivers can make to achieve a healthier lifestyle without making a career move?

Switch to Healthy Food Options

Making the switch from that fried chicken sandwich to a grilled option can reduce total calorie and fat intake. Drink water, unsweetened tea, or flavored sparkling water instead of those sugary, carbonated sodas. If it's caffeine you crave, go for black coffee or green teas instead of their calorie-loaded and sugar-driven counterparts.

Get Out and MOVE

When you get the chance to stop for a break or just a quick "rest", take a few moments to walk and get the blood flowing. Park a little further away so you can get some extra steps in. The activity is good for not only your physical health, but can also help your mental state.

Accountability = Success

Find an "Accountability Partner" in family, friends, company, or within a like-minded community. Even if your company does not have a wellness program, there are numerous health and wellness programs online that provide tips, tricks, coaching, and community. Check out what Dr. Mark Manera and Supply Chain Fitness are doing for our industry.

Fight Fatigue

Remember when we dedicated an entire week to the impacts of Fatigue on safe driving? Healthy sleep habits not only make for a safer driver, they also make a HEALTHIER driver. Poor quality sleep is repeatedly linked to lower metabolism and weight gain. Read more from our Safety Blitz 2022: Fatigue HERE.

SAFETY SPOTLIGHT

ABBY GREER February 8, 2023

Our newest feature to The Green Light shines the spotlight on Safety Directors throughout our programs to gain insight into not only their background, but also their thoughts and ideas on safety in our industry.

Meet Gary Smith, Safety Manager for Perdido Trucking Service, a Mobile, Alabama-based truckload carrier with locations in Alabama, Mississippi, and Florida. Gary joined Perdido in August 2011. He is also the co-chair for the ATA Comp Fund Risk Management Advisory Committee (RMAC), a panel of representatives from all over the industry that meet to discuss trends and changes in safety.

How did you get started in Safety?

I have been involved with operations and safety since 1986. Back then you told everyone to “be careful” and hoped for the best. Best practices have changed quite a bit through the years and safety has pivoted from being mostly reactive to proactive planning with the aim of prevention.

What advice do you wish you had received early in your career in Safety that you would pass on to someone just getting started?

Something that I learned through the years - be ready for continuous change. Good communication is the key to a successful safety program.

What do you view as the main duties of a Safety Director?

Providing and promoting a culture of safety throughout the company. The main goal each day is for our employees to get home safely to their families. You need “buy in” from the whole company. Everyone’s commitment is the key to a successful safety program. It starts at the top and must be promoted each and every day, holding everyone accountable.

Continued

What has been the most challenging task in your career as a Safety Director?

The installation and training on the camera system in our trucks was very challenging. Developing our program, making sure our drivers understood how the cameras worked, helping them see the benefits and why we implemented them was a real challenge in the beginning. ELD implementation was also very challenging.

What do you find most effective in getting existing and new truck drivers to buy in to safety?

The best way to get drivers to “buy in” to our safety program has been through clear and concise communication. They need to know the policies and procedures, as well as why we have them. We accomplish this by having a simple orientation package and continuous training. Weekly and monthly safety topics are communicated to the drivers and we give remedial training when there is an incident. Safety bonuses are awarded to our drivers quarterly and yearly for being incident free and we include our driver managers in that bonus package.

Why is safety important to you?

Safety is very important to me because it affects people’s lives and the wellbeing of the company. Safety demands continuous improvement with daily changes in the workplace.

If you could give any advice or message to the general public about the trucking industry, what would it be?

I would say to the public, trucking companies and their drivers are not the bad guys as portrayed in the media. Trucking affects every person and business and it’s the industry most Americans take for granted. Other sectors are essential to the economy and daily life, but none as intricately as trucking.

What would be your “safety quote” or “safety message” that you want to share?

Promote the 5 C’s in road safety: Care, Caution, Consideration, Common Sense, and Courtesy.
